Introduction

In 2013, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) rolled out a new approach to ensuring safe and adequate health care delivery to its patients: the CMS Quality Strategy (CMS, 2013). The CMS strategy is designed to align with the six goals of the Department of Health and Human Services' (HHS) National Quality Strategy. The CMS strategy is framed in the following way: "To improve, a broad-based and seamless reform approach is necessary to address challenges in our healthcare system—escalating costs, inadequate coverage and inefficient care of variable quality" (CMS, 2013).

Dialysis patients are a population particularly affected by such issues. Relative to the general population, they experience much higher levels of mortality (de Jager et al., 2009) and morbidity (e.g., hospital readmission; MedPAC, 2007). Both hospitalization and readmission rates reflect morbidity and quality of life of dialysis patients as well as medical costs. For example, in 2011 dialysis patients were admitted to the hospital twice on average and spent an average of 12 days in the hospital, accounting for approximately 38% of Medicare expenditures for ESRD patients (USRDS, 2013). Furthermore, 36% of hemodialysis patients discharged from the hospital had an unplanned readmission within 30 days (USRDS, 2013). In other settings (e.g., cardiovascular disease, cancer), some studies show that about 25% of unplanned readmissions are preventable, that preventability vary widely across diagnoses, and that readmissions were more likely to be preventable for patients with more severe conditions (van Walraven et al., 2011).

In the dialysis setting, care coordination strategies, including appropriate hand-off and timely pre- and post-discharge communication among care providers, have emerged as a potentially effective means to reduce unplanned readmission among the ESRD patients. A recent study in the ESRD population found that certain post-discharge assessments and changes in treatment at the dialysis facility may be associated with a reduced risk of readmission (Chan et al., 2009). A recent multi-unit qualitative study by Reilly et al. (2013) found that a lack of care coordination between in- and outpatient dialysis units post-discharge is associated with increased readmission rates. Other articles concerning the dialysis setting (e.g. Castner, 2011; Wish, 2014) discuss the importance of dialysis facility and physician communication with the discharging hospital in order to ensure appropriate coordination of care such as reconciliation of post-discharge medications and treatment orders.

Clinical studies in the non-ESRD populations have also demonstrated that improved care coordination and discharge planning can reduce readmission rates (e.g., Dunn et al., 1994; Bostrom et al., 1996; Dudas et al., 2001; Azevedo et al., 2002; Coleman et al., 2004; Coleman et al., 2006; Balaban et al., 2008; Braun et al., 2009) or a combination of pre- and post-discharge interventions (e.g., Naylor et al., 1994; McDonald et al., 2001; Creason, 2001; Ahmed et al., 2004; Anderson et al., 2005; Jack et al., 2009; Koehler et al., 2009; Parry et al., 2009). Readmission measures have been developed in various care settings, including hospitals and skilled nursing facilities.

With the U.S. healthcare system moving toward a paradigm of shared accountability across providers from different care settings, a readmission measure that is particularly applicable to ESRD patients will not only encourage improvement in transition of care across various settings, but will also serve as a strong motivation for facilities to coordinate treatment with the discharging hospital to reduce readmission rates. Such a measure should also encourage facilities to review readmission practices and identify potential problems. Moreover, measures of the frequency of unplanned readmissions are essential for controlling escalating medical costs in that they can help facilities identify problems and potentially improve care and reduce costs.

In 2011, CMS added a measure of 30-day readmission to the Dialysis Facility Reports (DFRs), which have been used by dialysis facilities and ESRD Networks for quality improvement, and by ESRD state surveyors for monitoring and surveillance of dialysis facilities. During 2011 – 2015, CMS developed a standardized, risk-adjusted measure of 30-day readmission called the Standardized Readmission Ratio (SRR). It was first publicly reported on the April 2015 refresh of the Dialysis Facility Compare (DFC) website, then was endorsed by NQF during the summer of 2015. In October 2015, CMS replaced the unadjusted readmission measure with the SRR on the FY2016 DFR.

Methods

Overview

The SRR is a measure of 30-day unplanned hospital readmission for dialysis patients discharged from any acute care hospital in the U.S. (He et al., 2013). The event of interest is an unplanned readmission within 4–30 days following an initiating hospitalization, termed an index hospital discharge, identified through the Medicare administrative data. To properly adjust for patient characteristics that may make unplanned readmission more likely, we used Medicare administrative data to characterize each patient’s comorbidity history, which we derived from inpatient, outpatient institutional, home health, hospice and skilled nursing facility claims.

The SRR reflects the number of readmission events for the patients at a facility, relative to the number of readmission events that would be expected based on overall national rates and the characteristics of the patients at that facility as well as the number of discharges. Specifically, the SRR is calculated as the ratio of two numbers; the numerator (“observed”) is the actual number of readmission events over a specified time period, and the denominator (“expected”) is the number of readmission events that would be expected if patients at that facility experienced readmission events at the national median rate for patients with similar characteristics. Where it was considered appropriate, the SRR was developed to be consistent with the (NQF# 1789) Hospital-Wide Readmission Measure (HWR) for hospitals, and incorporates a number of similar elements, including planned readmissions exclusions (YNHHSC/CORE, 2013) as well as similar denominator exclusion criteria. Taken in concert, the SRR and HWR are intended to bring excess readmissions to the attention of both the dialysis facility and the hospital of discharge.

As the denominator of the SRR estimates the expected number of readmissions given the observed number of discharges, the SRR may suggest a very high rate of readmissions even though the facility in question has a relatively low overall hospitalization rate. To avoid this situation, it has been suggested that the SRR should take as a reference the set of all patients in the facility rather than the set of hospital discharges. The Standardized Hospitalization Ratio (SHR) is an overall measure of hospital usage by patients at a dialysis facility and evaluates the overall rate of hospitalizations taking account of the number and characteristics of patients in the facility. Consideration of the SHR and the SRR together may prove useful in this respect. They measure two distinct aspects of the hospital usage by patients at a dialysis facility. As indicated, the SHR measures the effectiveness of care for chronically ill patients who frequently have multiple comorbidities, whereas the SRR focuses on communication and care coordination as patients return from acute hospitalization. A facility with a low SHR and high SRR is one where the overall frequency of hospitalization is relatively low, but where there may still be advantage in reviewing the processes associated with hospital discharge and readmission.

Measure Development

In April 2012, a CMS Technical Expert Panel (TEP) reviewed a preliminary version of the measure and suggested refinements. In response to suggestions, several changes were made to the SRR, which then was released for public comment in April 2013. However, some TEP members expressed concern about the measure, mainly regarding the lack of adjustment for physician(s) associated with the discharge and the readmission, and a related concern regarding facilities' not having full control over the implementation of changes that would address readmissions. CMS' position on both issues is detailed in the Risk Adjustment section of this document. Another concern raised during the TEP meeting was the use of index discharges, instead of patients, as defining the denominator. This is commented on briefly in the previous paragraph.

In July 2015, the National Quality Forum (NQF) endorsed this measure conditional on the removal of index discharges that resulted in a readmission within three days. This change will be implemented in the SRR reported in the October 2016 release of Dialysis Facility Compare. The analyses presented in this report were revised in September 2016 to incorporate this exclusion.

Data Sources

Data are derived from an extensive national ESRD patient database, which is primarily based on the CMS Consolidated Renal Operations in a Web-enabled Network (CROWN) system. The CROWN data include the Renal Management Information System (REMIS), CROWNWeb facility-reported clinical and administrative data (including CMS-2728 Medical Evidence Form, CMS-2746 Death Notification Form, and CMS-2744 Annual Facility Survey Form data), the historical Standard Information Management System (SIMS) database (formerly maintained by the 18 ESRD Networks until replaced by CROWNWeb in May 2012), Medicare dialysis and hospital payment records, transplant data from the Organ Procurement and Transplant Network (OPTN), the Dialysis Facility Compare (DFC) and the Social Security Death Master File. The database is comprehensive for Medicare patients.

CROWNWeb provides patient tracking by dialysis provider and treatment modality for non-Medicare patients. During time periods in which CROWNWeb does not have information for a dialysis patient, outpatient claims data (NCH claim type 40) are used to supplement tracking. Although claims data are used for a small percentage of dialysis patient treatment history, their use sometimes results in a patient being assigned to a non-dialysis facility (e.g., an outpatient hospital submitting an outpatient claim) for these non-CROWNWeb time periods. Eligible index discharges for any patient assigned to a non-dialysis facility at the time of hospital discharge are included in the model; however, because the SRR measure is limited to dialysis facilities on the quarterly DFC list, these hospitalizations are neither publicly reported nor distributed to non-dialysis facilities.

Information on index discharges and readmissions is obtained from Part A Medicare Inpatient Claims Standard Analysis Files (SAFs). Information on each patient's comorbidity status during the 365 days preceding the index discharge is obtained from multiple Part A types (inpatient, home health, hospice, skilled nursing facility claims) and Part B outpatient types of Medicare Claims SAFs.

Outcome Definition

The event is defined to be an unplanned readmission to an acute care hospital for any cause within 4–30 days of the discharge date for the index hospitalization.

Cohort Definition and Inclusion/Exclusion

Index discharges are restricted to Medicare-covered hospitalizations for inpatient care at short-term acute care hospitals and critical access hospitals. Discharges from skilled nursing facilities (SNFs), long-term care hospitals (LTCHs), rehabilitation hospitals and PPS-exempt cancer hospitals—as well as those from separate dedicated units for hospice, rehabilitation and psychiatric care—are excluded. To be counted as an index discharge, the patient must be receiving dialysis treatment for ESRD at the time of discharge.

In addition, index discharges exclude hospitalizations:

- for patients who died during the hospitalization (because there was no opportunity for readmission);
- for patients who were discharged against medical advice (AMA);
- that are followed in 30 days by the patient's death (and no readmission);
- that ended in a transfer to another acute care facility (for patients who are transferred between one acute care hospital and another, the measure considers these multiple contiguous hospitalizations as a single acute episode of care, and readmission for transferred patients is attributed to the hospital that ultimately discharges the patient to a non-acute care setting);
- that took place at Prospective Payment System (PPS)-exempt cancer hospitals;
- that occur after a patient's 12th hospital admission in the time period;
- with a primary diagnosis of medical treatment of cancer (CCS: 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45), certain psychiatric conditions (CCS: 650, 651, 652, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 662, 670) or rehabilitation for prosthesis (CCS 254); and
- that result in a readmission (unplanned) within 3 days of discharge.

Index discharges are attributed to the dialysis provider to which the patient is discharged at the end of the hospital stay. In other words, the facility to which the patient is discharged is held responsible for any unplanned readmissions occurring within 4–30 days of the index discharge, regardless of whether the patient is still being treated at the facility associated with the index discharge at the time of readmission.

Please refer to the SRR Flowchart in the appendix for a visual overview of how index discharges are included in the model.

Capping Readmissions

Facility size is a major factor in the decision to restrict “frequent flyers” from the measure. During the TEP's review of the measure, members were concerned that, especially for small facilities, allowing a patient at high risk of readmission (e.g., an HIV-positive patient) to contribute without limit to the denominator and numerator could unfairly skew that facility's measure. In response to this concern, we removed hospitalizations following an individual patient's 12th discharge in the time period. Sensitivity analyses excluding this cap (representing 0.8% of 2012 hospital discharges) led to only small changes in the flagging rate for smaller facilities.

Early Readmissions

One concern raised throughout the NQF review of this measure is the appropriateness of attributing readmissions to a dialysis facility within 0-3 days post hospital discharge. It was noted by the community that it is likely that these readmissions would occur during a period where the dialysis facility may not have had an opportunity to see the patient. Further, stakeholders were concerned that the dialysis facilities do not systematically receive data about their patients from the hospital when they are readmitted, and potentially limiting quality improvement efforts.

As part of the NQF endorsement process, CMS agreed that a phased approach could be undertaken to include these patients in the measure. CMS has initially excluded patients who are readmitted within 0-3 days, but is working with the renal community to monitor the care experience for this population, with the intent of including them in the measure in the future. The endorsed measure (NQF #2496) reported on DFC and in the ESRD QIP incorporates this exclusion.

Risk Adjustment

Adjustment in SRR

We adapted the risk adjustment approach used in the model for CMS' Standardized Hospitalization Ratio (SHR) in the calculation of the SRR. The regression model used to compute a facility's "expected" number of readmissions for the SRR measure contains many factors thought to be associated with readmission event rates. Specifically, the model adjusts for age, sex, diabetes, duration of end-stage renal disease (ESRD), body mass index (BMI) at start of dialysis, past-year comorbidities, length of the index hospital stay, and the presence of a high-risk diagnosis at index discharge. In addition, the model adjusts for the effect of the discharging hospital (via random effects).

CMS decided to adjust for hospital since the dialysis facilities have relatively little control over hospitals, and this adjustment helps avoid the possibility of dialysis providers' selective acceptance of patients based on the referring hospital at discharge. There is also a natural association between a unique hospital and a dialysis facility at the time of discharge. The adjustment using random effects avoids technical issues arising when a dialysis facility is associated with a unique hospital, and also retains an incentive for the dialysis facility to seek coordination of care with the hospital with the aim of reducing readmission rates.

Among the dialysis patient population, the total variance in readmission rates attributable to the dialysis facility is comparable to the variance attributable to the hospital, which suggests a strong shared accountability between dialysis facility and the discharging hospital (Turenne et al., 2012; He et al., 2013). The inclusion of hospitals as random effects in the SRR model is consistent with the HWR measure for hospitals, but here the purpose is to adjust the measure for facilities, taking into account the overall distribution of hospital effects, and not to identify individual extreme outcomes for hospitals. By including an adjustment for discharging hospital, we aim to determine the true effect of a facility, despite the quality of the hospital from which it receives patients. Adding this adjustment to the model has a relatively small effect on the distribution of SRRs. The inclusion of the random effect for hospital does not greatly alter the overall categorization of facilities as worse than expected, as expected or better than expected, although it does affect the categorization of some facilities.

Below are details on the SRR's risk adjusters:

- Sex: We determine each patient's sex from his/her CMS Form 2728. Sex is never missing for patients in the ESRD database.
- Age: We determine each patient's age from the birth date provided in the SIMS and REMIS databases. Date of birth is never missing for patients in the ESRD database.

- Years on ESRD: We determine each patient’s length of time on dialysis using the first service date from his/her CMS 2728, claims history (all claim types), the SIMS database and the SRTR database. First service date is never missing for patients in the ESRD database.
- Diabetes as cause of ESRD: We determine each patient’s primary cause of ESRD from his/her CMS 2728. When cause of ESRD is missing, we assume diabetes is not the cause of ESRD.
- BMI at incidence: We calculate each patient’s BMI based on the height and weight provided on his/her CMS 2728. When height and/or weight are missing, we impute a BMI for the patient based on the average BMI of all patients—specific to sex, race, diabetic status and age at ESRD incidence—with at least one eligible index discharge in the calendar year.
- Days hospitalized during index hospitalization: Each hospitalization’s length is determined by taking the difference between the date of admission and the date of discharge available on the inpatient claim. For patients who are transferred between one acute care hospital and another, the measure considers these multiple contiguous hospitalizations as a single acute episode of care, and the length is calculated by taking the difference between the date of admission for the first hospitalization and the date of discharge from the last hospitalization included.
- Past-year comorbidities (risk variables): We identify all unique ICD diagnosis codes for each patient reported on Medicare claims in the 365 days preceding (and inclusive of) the index discharge date. We examine five available claim types for codes: inpatient, outpatient, skilled nursing facility [SNF], hospice and home health claims. We group these diagnosis codes by diagnosis area using CMS’ Condition Categories (CCs; see https://www.cms.gov/Medicare/Health-Plans/MedicareAdvtgSpecRateStats/downloads/evaluation\_risk\_adj\_model\_2011.pdf). The HWR measure has determined that a subset of these diagnosis areas is appropriate to use in accounting for case mix; the Appendix lists the CCs included in these areas.
- Discharged with high-risk condition: We define a high-risk diagnosis as any diagnosis area (grouped by the AHRQ Clinical Classification Software (CCS)) that was rare in our population but had a 30-day readmission rate of at least 40%. Note that high-risk diagnosis groups related to cancer or mental health are not index discharges, and so such diagnoses are not included. The CCS areas identified as high-risk are:
  - CCS 5: HIV infection
  - CCS 6: Hepatitis
  - CCS 56: Cystic fibrosis
  - CCS 57: Immunity disorders
  - CCS 61: Sickle cell anemia
  - CCS 190: Fetal distress and abnormal forces of labor
  - CCS 151: Other liver diseases
  - CCS 182: Hemorrhage during pregnancy; abruptio placenta; placenta previa
  - CCS 186: Diabetes or abnormal glucose tolerance complicating pregnancy; childbirth; or the puerperium
  - CCS 210: Systemic lupus erythematosus and connective tissue disorders
  - CCS 243: Poisoning by nonmedicinal substances

In summary, the SRR indicates whether a facility experienced higher or lower readmission rates than the national average after accounting for differences that could be attributed to the patient characteristics listed above, as well as the discharging hospital. It should also be noted that the process of identifying comorbidities using ICD codes over the past year could introduce some biases in that comorbidities will be more frequently found among patients who are more frequently hospitalized or are using the health system in other ways.

Adjustor Selection

We developed the model to align with CMS’s existing measures of hospitalization currently used for public reporting: the National Quality Forum (NQF)-endorsed Hospital-Wide Readmission (HWR) measure, NQF# 1789, (YNHHSC/CORE, 2013)—and of hospitalization amongst dialysis patients—the NQF-endorsed SHR, NQF# 1463 (Liu, Schaubel and Kalbfleisch, 2012). The first iteration of the SRR included the following adjustors:

- To align with the HWR measure:
  - at index discharge, patient age
  - at index discharge, comorbidity status—that is, 36 separate indicators for a select set of comorbidities in the year leading up to the index discharge
- To align with the SHR measure:
  - patient sex and age
  - hypertension as the primary cause of ESRD
  - diabetes mellitus as the primary cause of ESRD
  - at incidence of ESRD, comorbidity status
  - at incidence of ESRD, BMI
  - at index discharge, time on dialysis

In addition to the patient- and discharge-level adjustors used in the SHR and HWR measures, we include two variables as adjustors in the SRR model that are not included in either the SHR or HWR measure:

1. An indicator for whether a patient was discharged with a “high-risk” diagnosis using the AHRQ CCS grouping described above. Inclusion of this variable recognizes the very high readmission rates associated with these diagnoses.
2. The length of stay for the index discharge. We selected this adjustor initially because it has face validity from the clinical perspective and is supported in the literature (e.g., Chan et al., 2009 found a negative relationship between length of stay and hemoglobin levels, albumin levels and weight among hemodialysis patients).

Nephrologist/Physician

The SRR does not include an adjustment for a patient’s physician, although there has interest voiced by the dialysis community and the Technical Expert Panel that developed the measures in such an adjustment. The rationale motivating this request is the view that the decision to admit a patient is a physician decision, and not directly under the control of the dialysis facility.

It is a CMS policy decision not to adjust for physician in the model for the following reasons. First, implementation and harmonization of such adjustment would affect many CMS measures and would raise many questions as to which physicians should be adjusted for. Second, the facilities have a legal obligation to oversee the quality of care provided by the interdisciplinary team, including physicians working in the dialysis unit.

Measuring readmissions at the dialysis facility level encourages facility management to seek opportunities for coordination of care among hospitals, patients, nephrologists and other dialysis facility staff. The measure provides a direct indication of how the dialysis facility’s outcomes fare in comparison to the national norm, taking account of important patient characteristics and the discharging hospital. Dialysis facilities have an explicit responsibility defined in current regulations to oversee the provision of care by an interdisciplinary team (IDT), which includes the nephrologist treating the patient. Oversight of individual staff nephrologist care, ensuring adherence to dialysis facility policies and Medicare regulations is primarily the responsibility of the site Medical Director, a paid employee of the dialysis facility, and, additionally, the responsibility of the dialysis facility governing body (Conditions for Coverage [CfCs] 494.150 and 494.180; CMS 2008). The IDT is responsible for assessing dialysis patients in a timely manner and developing a plan of care specific to that patient, per Medicare regulation. (CfCs 494.80 and 494.90; CMS 2008) The assessment and plan of care developed by this team includes aspects of dialysis care that are frequently the cause of hospital admission and, plausibly, readmission, including fluid management, dialysis vascular access management, anemia management, dialysis prescription.

The overall effectiveness of patient care provided by the IDT(s) at any given facility is monitored by the Quality Assurance and Performance Improvement Committee, specified by the current CMS regulations at 494.110 (CMS 2008). The scope of this oversight includes the performance of all professional members of the facility's IDT(s), and Interpretive Guidance for this regulation specifies that the QAPI Committee be chaired by the facility's medical director. Failure of the dialysis facility's IDT to evaluate the medical results of hospitalization and to revise the patient's plan of care in a timely manner is entirely the responsibility of the facility. If the ability of the IDT is hampered by poorly trained staff, systemic problems with the facility operations or lack of nephrologist engagement, the failure remains the responsibility of the facility, through the authority of the facility's governing body and medical director. Whether facilities choose to act on this responsibility is a matter of policy, and therefore properly belongs within the purview of quality assessment for the facility. Risk adjusting for physician would place CMS in the position of suggesting that a dialysis facility is not responsible for health consequences experienced by patients as the result of business or policy decisions by the facility administration.

Evaluation of Patient-level and Area-level Sociodemographic (SDS) and Socioeconomic (SES) factors and hospitalization

The SDS/SES adjusters included in the SRR are limited to patient age and sex only. Using hierarchical binary logistic regression we fit three additional models for readmissions to 2014 hospitalization data (Medicare claims), to evaluate additional patient and area-level SDS and SES factors (race, ethnicity; insurance status, employment status, and area-level deprivation indicators) and assess their impacts on readmissions. A summary of the results based on the full model, with both patient and area level factors included, is described below.

Patient-level SDS: Hispanics were less likely to be readmitted to the hospital (Beta= -0.0659; p=0.001) than non-Hispanics. Compared with white patients, Asian/Pacific Islander (Beta= -0.0832, p<0.001), Native American (Beta= -0.0737, p<0.001) and black (Beta= -0.005, p<0.001) patients were less likely to be readmitted to the hospital.

Patient-level SES: Compared with Medicare-primary patients, patients with both Medicare and Medicaid (dually eligible patients) (Beta = 0.0303; p<0.001) were more likely to be readmitted to the hospital; patients with Medicare as secondary/Medicare HMO (Beta = 0.0006, p=0.4375) were not significantly different on readmission. The result for dually eligible patients being more likely to be readmitted is consistent with the observation that patients in this insurance category, on average, represent a higher at-risk group. Further examination is needed to understand the higher likelihood of readmission for patients with Medicare as secondary payer or HMO. It is possible that these patients represent a larger portion of incident ESRD patients, which have a known higher risk of complications in the first year of ESRD. Patients who were unemployed prior to ESRD incidence were less likely to be readmitted to the hospital (Beta = -0.0596;  $p < 0.0001$ ) than employed patients.

Area-level SES: We applied the publicly available Area Deprivation Index (ADI) developed by Singh and colleagues. The ADI reflects a full set of SES characteristics, including measures of income, education, and employment status, measured at the ZIP code level. Singh (2003) has applied the index in a variety of contexts, including analysis of county-level mortality rates. Singh found area differences in mortality associated with low area level deprivation. Over their period studied, mortality differences widened because of slower mortality reductions in more deprived areas. More recently, the ADI has been applied to the calculation of risk-adjusted rates of hospital readmission (Kind et al 2014).

The coefficient for ADI in the full model was very small, and not significant (0.0003,  $p = 0.9387$ ). Additionally, we find that there are many facilities serving disadvantaged populations that are able to achieve SRR levels in the range of SRRs achieved by facilities serving patients in higher SES areas (see Figure 1 below).

Conclusions: Several patient-level SDS/SES factors are significantly predictive of readmissions (being unemployed, being dually eligible for Medicare and Medicaid; patient race, and Hispanic ethnicity). Perhaps unsurprisingly, the ZIP-code level ADI is not predictive of readmissions, given its less direct relationship with patients' socioeconomic status. Finally, after including all these SDS/SES covariates, the resulting SRRs remain highly correlated. The SRRs based on the original SRR model are highly correlated with the SRR model that included all the additional SDS/SES covariates (correlation coefficient  $> 0.99$  for all models). Additionally, outlier facilities are flagged at a nearly identical rate between the original and sensitivity models with all the additional patient and area-level SDS/SES covariates (kappa statistic > 0.96 for all models). These results show that facility profiling changes very little with the addition of these selected patient- or area-level SDS/SES factors.

*Patient factors are Medicare coverage at index discharge, employment status 6 months prior to ESRD onset, race and ethnicity.

These empirical results demonstrate very minimal differences. Additionally, these results, coupled with a concern that adjustment for SES could justify differing levels of care quality for these higher risk subpopulations and thereby reduce patients' access to high quality care, indicate it would not be appropriate to adjust SRR with these additional SDS/SES factors.

Readmission Model and SRR Calculation

Overview

The expected number of readmissions in the denominator of the SRR is calculated based on a statistical model for the probability that a given hospital discharge will give rise to an unplanned readmission within the next 4–30 days. This model is technically termed a hierarchical logistic model and takes into account the patient characteristics or covariates discussed above. In addition, our model includes a random effect term for hospital of discharge and so makes an adjustment in patient outcomes for the potential effect of the care received at the hospital. This adjustment acknowledges the fact that there is a shared responsibility between the dialysis facility and the discharging hospital for patient care. At the same time, the model retains an incentive for facilities and hospitals to coordinate care in order improve outcomes with respect to readmissions. Facility effects are also estimated in the model, and the number of readmissions in each facility is compared to the number that would be expected at an 'average' facility (actually the median facility) given the patient characteristics. There are a number of technical details associated with this computation that are not dealt with in this summary. The interested reader is referred to He et al. (2013).

In general, we aim to adjust for patient characteristics that affect the endpoint of interest. These include such factors as age, BMI and comorbidities as measured at the time origin or baseline. For SRR, the relevant time origin is the index discharge, and so we adjust for most of the patient's characteristics around the time of that discharge.

In assessing the effects of patient covariates or characteristics, we estimate the within facility differences in outcomes that can be attributed to that covariate. To do this, we estimate the regression coefficients for the covariate while adjusting for potential facility effects through inclusion of facilities in the model as fixed effects. It is important in estimating covariate effects to take this approach since otherwise there is a potential confounding between the effects of facilities and patient characteristics.

For example, suppose that older patients are associated with poorer outcomes and that older patients tended to attend facilities that provided better care and that, as a result, tended to have better outcomes. If the effect of the covariates were estimated without adjusting for facilities, either by ignoring possible facility effects or including facilities as random effects, the age effect would be incorrectly estimated. In effect, we would underestimate the negative effect of older age on the outcome.

From a technical perspective, fixed effects provide more precise estimation of the true effects for those facilities with extreme outcomes, as opposed to random effects, which result in shrinkage estimators (where the estimate for each facility is shifted toward the overall mean). The shrinkage becomes substantial for smaller facilities, making identification of poor performance in smaller facilities even more difficult. Issues associated with this choice are described in some detail in Kalbfleisch and Wolfe (2013) and He et al. (2013).

In what follows we give a brief overview of the approach taken in a more technical framework for any reader who would like to have a more specific summary of the approach. The section can, however, be omitted by the reader who is not interested in such detail.

Calculation of SRR

The equations used in the measure calculation are as follows:

1. The main model, which produces the estimates used to calculate SRR, takes the form:

$$\log \frac{p_{ijk}}{1 - p_{ijk}} = \gamma_i + \alpha_j + \beta^T Z_{ijk}, \quad (1)$$

Where  $p_{ijk}$  represents the probability of an unplanned readmission for the  $k^{\text{th}}$  discharge among patients from the  $i^{\text{th}}$  facility who are discharged from  $j^{\text{th}}$  hospital, and  $Z_{ijk}$  represents the set of patient-level characteristics. Here,  $\gamma_i$  is the fixed effect for facility and  $\alpha_j$  is the random effect for hospital  $j$ . It is assumed that the  $\alpha_j$ s arise as independent normal variables (i.e.,  $\alpha_j \sim N(0, \sigma^2)$ .)

2. We use the estimates from this model to calculate the  $i^{\text{th}}$  facility's SRR:

$$SRR_i = \frac{O_i}{E_i} = \frac{O_i}{\sum_{j \in \mathcal{H}(i)} \sum_{k=1}^{n_{ij}} \hat{p}_{ijk}}, \quad (2)$$ where, for the  $i^{\text{th}}$  facility,  $O_i$  is the number of observed unplanned readmissions,  $E_i$  is the expected number of unplanned readmissions,  $\mathcal{H}(i)$  is the collection of indices of hospitals from which patients are discharged to the  $i^{\text{th}}$  facility, and  $\hat{p}_{ijk}$  is the estimated probability of an unplanned readmission under the national norm for each discharge. More specifically,

$$\hat{p}_{ijk} = \frac{\exp(\hat{\gamma}_M + \hat{\alpha}_j + \hat{\beta}^T Z_{ijk})}{1 + \exp(\hat{\gamma}_M + \hat{\alpha}_j + \hat{\beta}^T Z_{ijk})}, \quad (3)$$

estimates the probability that a discharge from hospital  $j$  to facility  $i$  of a patient with characteristics  $Z_{ijk}$  would result in an unplanned readmission; this probability is being estimated assuming that the facility's effect corresponds to the median of national facility effects, denoted by  $\hat{\gamma}_M$ . Here,  $\hat{\alpha}_i$  and  $\hat{\beta}$  are estimates from model (1). The sum of these probabilities is the expected number of unplanned readmissions  $E_i$  at facility  $i$ , adjusting for patient mix and under the national norm.

Properties of the Hierarchical Logistic Model

In the model, we aim to formulate shared responsibilities among hospitals and facilities, while encouraging cooperation and communication between them.

The inclusion of hospitals as random effects avoids the non-identifiability issue that apparently arises when a single hospital is associated with a single facility. Also, the random effects tend to smooth the effect of the hospital by “shrinking” the estimates toward a national average for hospitals serving dialysis patients. Thus, for example, if a given facility-hospital combination has a much higher readmission rate than the national median rate, the explanation for this outcome would be shared between the facility and the hospital. The hospital effect is estimated to be somewhat higher than the national average to reflect the high rates, but the estimated hospital effect will be ‘shrunk’ toward the overall national rate for hospitals. In this sense, facilities as well as hospitals will benefit from coordination of care.

We also use fixed effects to make inferences about dialysis facilities. Fixed effects models treat individual facilities separately and provide more precise estimation of the true effects for facilities with outcomes that are substantially worse (or better) than expected. We utilize an “exact” method to calculate the  $p$ -values associated for each facility. This method assesses the probability that the facility would experience a number of readmissions more extreme than that observed if readmission rates at that facility were identical to those of the national average. This method also works even if there are no readmissions observed or if all or nearly all discharges result in a readmission. Furthermore, in cases where a facility experiences no readmissions, the facility effect becomes undefined in the model, causing a numerical problem. To overcome this, we add a continuity correction (e.g., 0.1 divided by the number of patients in that facility) for such facilities. Note that when we calculate SRRs, we use the national median facility effect as the population norm, which is robust to these extreme values.

The model consistently demonstrates fair accuracy, with an average C statistic of 0.6265 for 2014, which is comparable to CMS’ measure of readmission for hospitals (HWR; YNHHS/CORE, 2013; C statistic range: 0.62–0.67). The C statistic measures the predictive power of the regression model. An alternative interpretation of the C statistic is obtained by considering the set of all pairs of index discharges where one discharge in the pair leads to a readmission and the other leads to no readmission. The C statistic is then the proportion of the pairs for which the model would correctly identify which discharge was more likely to lead to a readmission. A purely random assignment of readmission likelihood would yield a C statistic of 0.5, whereas a perfect measure would yield a C statistic of 1.0.

The 2014 model's fit is demonstrated in Figure 3, which compares the observed rates with the model-based predictions. We categorize all observations into 20 groups based on their model-based predicted values and compute the observed readmission proportion for each group. We then logit-transform each group's observed readmission proportion and plot it against the same group's average linear prediction. In Figure 3, if all the plotted points fell along the 45-degree line, this would represent a perfect match between the observed values and the model-based predictions. In general, the closer the observed values are to this line the better the model fit. As Figure X shows, the observed values are spaced fairly equally and lie very close to the 45-degree line, indicating an overall good fit.

Creating Interval Estimates

Measuring or assessing significance of a large SRR (i.e., an SRR greater than 1) is based on the  $p$ -value. To calculate the  $p$ -value, we use an exact method that assesses the probability that the facility would experience a number of readmissions as extreme as that observed if the null hypothesis were true; this calculation accounts for each facility's patient mix. For instance, to test the hypothesis that a facility's true SRR is 1.0, we calculate the positive one-tailed  $p$ -value or significance level ( $SL^+$ ) for each facility as the probability that the number of readmissions in that facility would be at least as large as that observed under the assumption that this facility has readmission rates corresponding to the median facility and given the patient characteristics or covariates. The negative one-tailed  $p$ -value ( $SL^-$ ) is defined correspondingly (e.g., as small as). The two-tailed  $p$ -value is then defined as  $p = 2 * \min(SL^+, SL^-)$ . We use a "mid- $p$ " value to avoid two-tailed  $p$ -values greater than 1. Approaches for flagging are based on converting the  $p$ -values to z-statistics and using methods based on the empirical null hypothesis, which accounts for overdispersion in the data (Efron, 2004; Kalbfleisch and Wolfe, 2013). In effect, this method takes into account the natural variation observed between facilities and that cannot be accounted for by the model. To implement the empirical null methods, we stratify facilities into three groups based on the number of eligible discharges within each facility. We then plot the histograms of Z-scores for each strata along with normal curves fitted to the center of the histograms using a robust M-estimation method. We use these empirical null distributions to assess outlier facilities. This empirical null method makes appropriate adjustment in each of the strata and yields fairly consistent flagging rates across all strata.

To calculate the 95% interval estimate for SRR, we use an exact method that assesses the range of facility effects, such that the probability the facility would experience a number of readmissions more extreme than that observed under the assumed facility effect is non-significant (e.g.,  $p > 0.05$ ). To account for natural facility variation not explained by the model, evaluation of significance is based on the empirical null distribution, instead of the standard normal density.

Reliability Testing

To assess the SRR’s reliability, we evaluated the SRR derived from data on dialysis patient hospital discharges in 2012. If the measure were a simple average across individuals in the facility, the usual approach for determining measure reliability would be a one-way analysis of variance (ANOVA), in which the between- and within-facility variation in the measure is determined (HSAG, 2012). The inter-unit reliability (IUR) measures the proportion of the measure variability that is attributable to the between-facility variance. The SRR, however, is not a simple average, and we instead estimate the IUR using a bootstrap approach, which uses a resampling scheme to estimate the within-facility variation.

Here we describe our approach to calculating IUR. Suppose that there are  $N$  facilities with at least 11 discharges in the year. Let  $T_1, \dots, T_N$  be the SRR for these facilities. Within each facility, select at random and with replacement  $B = 100$  bootstrap samples. That is, if the  $i$ th facility has  $n_i$  subjects, randomly draw with replacement  $n_i$  subjects from those in the same facility, find their corresponding  $SRR_i$ , and repeat the process 100 times. Thus, for the  $i$ th facility, we have bootstrapped SRRs of  $T_{i1}^, \dots, T_{i100}^$ . Let  $S_i^*$  be the sample variance of this bootstrap sample. From this it can be seen that is a bootstrap estimate of the within-facility variance in the SRR, namely  $\sigma_{t,w}^2$ . Calling on formulas from the one way analysis of variance, an estimate of the overall variance of  $T_i$  is where

$$s_t^2 = \frac{1}{n'(N - 1)} \sum_{i=1}^N n_i (T_i - \bar{T})^2$$

$$\bar{T} = \sum n_i T_i / \sum n_i$$

is the weighted mean of the observed SRR and $$n' = \frac{1}{N-1} \left( \sum n_i - \frac{\sum n_i^2}{\sum n_i} \right)$$ is approximately the average facility size (number of patients per facility). Note that  $s_t^2$  is an estimate of  $\sigma_b^2 + \sigma_{t,w}^2$  where  $\sigma_b^2$  is the between-facility variance, the true signal reflecting the differences across facilities. Thus, the IUR, which is defined by

can be estimated with  $(s_t^2 - s_{t,w}^2)/s_t^2$

Overall, IURs for the SRR ranged from 0.49–0.54 (F-statistic: 1.96–2.17;  $p < 0.0001$ ) across the years 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012, which indicates that about half of the variation in the SRR can be attributed to the between-facility differences and half to within-facility variation. This value of IUR indicates a moderate degree of reliability. When stratified by facility size, we find that, as expected, larger facilities have larger IURs (see Table 3).

Validity Testing

We assessed the validity of the measure through various comparisons of this measure with other quality measures in use, and in May 2012 presented a preliminary version of the SRR to a CMS Technical Expert Panel (TEP) for assessment of clinical validity.

The SRR is a measure of hospital use, comprising many causes of hospitalization. The TEP considered devising cause-specific SRRs but recommended the use of overall SRR measures due to various reasons, including the lack of clear consensus on which causes are modifiable by the dialysis facility and concerns about gaming the system if certain conditions are identified. This decision was consistent with the HWR measure.

As hospitalization is a major cost factor in the management of ESRD patients, there is a strong case for face validity of the SRR measure. This face validity of the SRR measure is also supported by its association with other known quality measures, which include both dialysis facility outcomes and practices.

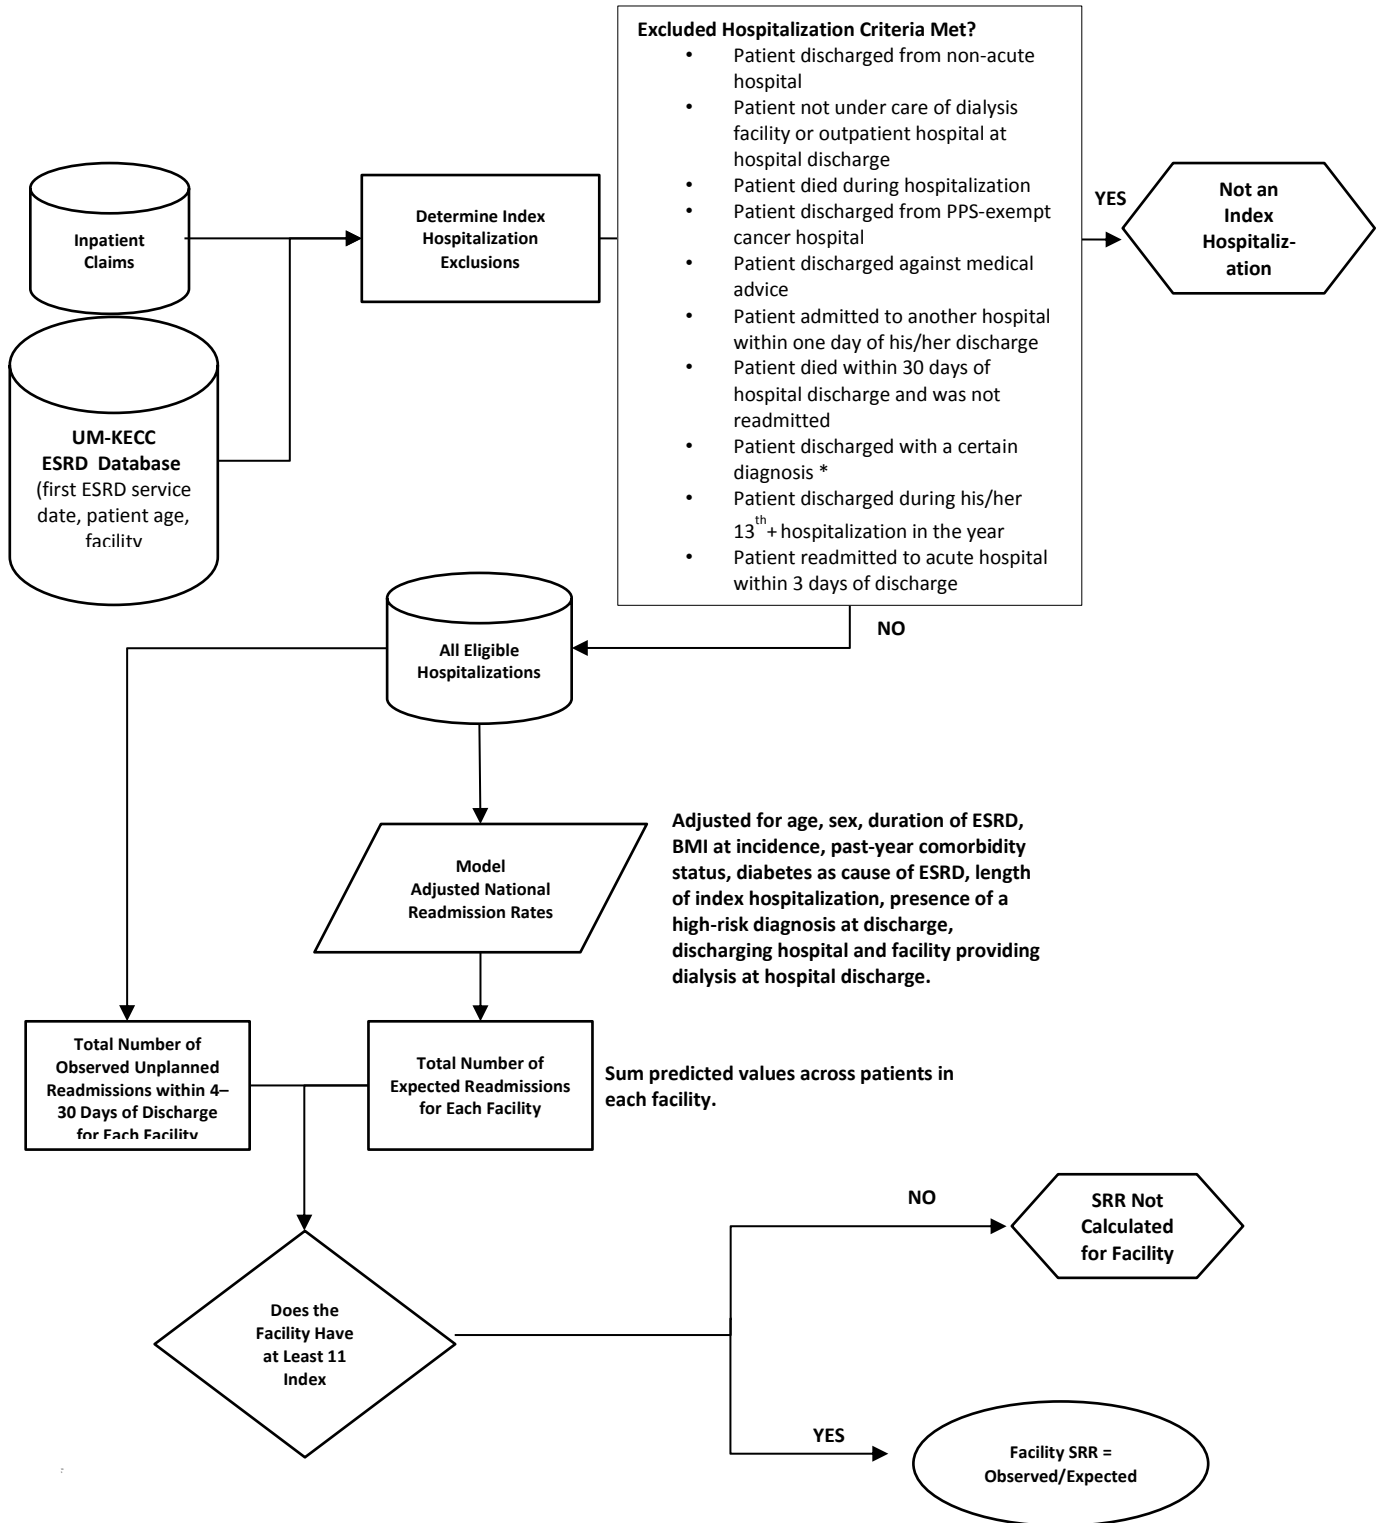

Also for 2013, the SHR and SMR was correlated with the Standardized Readmission Ratio (SRR) as expected (SHR rho =0.43, p<0.0001; SMR rho = 0.16, p<.0001).
